Updates (last updated 9/30/22): This article has been repeatedly updated with more congressional candidates, has been rearranged by alphabetical order, and has been updated to note the status of the candidates following the primary and general elections.

Multiple supporters of the QAnon conspiracy theory, which got its start on far-right message boards, ran for Congress in 2020.

The conspiracy theory, which revolves around an anonymous account known as "Q," started on far-right message board site 4chan, later moving to fellow far-right message board site 8chan, which has since relaunched as 8kun. (Beyond the QAnon conspiracy theory, 8chan/8kun has been linked to multiple instances of white supremacist terrorism, including the 2019 massacre in El Paso, Texas.)

The "Q" account's claim – and the conspiracy theory's premise – is that President Donald Trump was working with then-special counsel Robert Mueller to take down the president's perceived enemies, the "deep state," and pedophiles. Multiple adherents to the conspiracy theory have been

QAnon
Conspiracy
Theory

The “Q” account’s claim – and the conspiracy theory’s premise – is that President Donald Trump was working with then-special counsel Robert Mueller to take down the president’s perceived enemies, the “deep state,” and pedophiles. Multiple adherents to the conspiracy theory have been tied to acts of violence, including multiple murders and attempted kidnappings, and an FBI field office released a memo in May 2019 that listed QAnon as a potential domestic terrorism threat.

Among these candidates who have endorsed or given credence to the conspiracy theory or promoted QAnon content:

- Two candidates, in Georgia and Colorado, were elected to Congress in the general election on November 3. Both are Republicans.
- Thirty candidates – 27 Republicans, one member of the Independent Party of Delaware, and two independents – were on the ballot in November’s general election after competing in primary elections or after fulfilling other requirements needed to get on the ballot.
- Of those 30 candidates, five were from California, four each were from Georgia and Florida, two each were from Illinois, Arizona, and Delaware, and there was one each from Colorado, Nevada, Tennessee, Hawaii, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Virginia, Rhode Island, Oregon, Ohio, and Texas.
- Four candidates, one in New York, one in Missouri, and two in Massachusetts, ran as Republican write-ins in the general election. One candidate in Alaska ran as an independent write-in candidate in the general election.
- In total, 98 of the candidates were Republicans, two were Democrats, one was a Libertarian, one was a member of the Independent Party of Delaware, and five were independents.

Below is the list of 2020 congressional candidates who endorsed or gave credence to the conspiracy theory or promoted QAnon content, divided into sections for 1) candidates elected to Congress; 2) candidates who contested the general election and lost; and 3) candidates who were no longer running or whose status was unknown before the general election.

Candidates elected to Congress

Lauren Boebert (Colorado)

Lauren Boebert was a Republican nominee who won in Colorado’s 3rd Congressional District during the general election after winning the Republican primary on June 30. She appeared on the online show Steel Truth, hosted by QAnon supporter Ann Vandersteel, during which Vandersteel asked her if she knew about “the Q movement.” Boebert responded that she was “very familiar with it” and said that while she did not focus on it a lot, she hoped that QAnon “is real because it only means America is getting stronger and better.” She also said that everything she heard about QAnon “is only motivating and encouraging and bringing people together, stronger, and if this is real, then it can be really great for our country.” In May, Boebert also appeared on Patriots’ Soapbox, a major QAnon YouTube channel, and she also appears to have a YouTube account that subscribes to multiple QAnon channels. Despite all of that, Boebert has since claimed, “I don’t follow QAnon” and that “QAnon is a lot of things to different people.”

Marjorie Taylor Greene (Georgia)

Marjorie Taylor Greene was a Republican nominee who won in Georgia's 14th Congressional District during the general election after coming in first in the Republican primary on June 9 with a plurality and then subsequently winning the primary runoff on August 11. In 2018, she posted on Facebook about an "awesome post by Q" and echoed another "Q" post about a conspiracy theory that the Obama administration got MS-13 gang members to kill Democratic staffer Seth Rich.

Greene has posted the QAnon slogan on Facebook and on Twitter, the latter in response to a tweet defending the legitimacy of "Q" where she also wrote, "Trust the plan" (another catchphrase QAnon supporters use). She also has tweeted the QAnon-connected hashtag "#GreatAwakening" to far-right conspiracy theorist Alex Jones. She has also appeared in a video where she discussed following QAnon, calling "Q" a "patriot" and "worth listening to," and in a now-defunct website wrote favorably about the conspiracy theory. According to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution, Greene also "has posted a series of tweets defending QAnon, including one" – now deleted – "encouraging her followers to message her with questions so she can 'walk you through the whole thing.'" In August, Greene dubiously claimed to Fox News that she has since chosen "another path" due to "misinformation" from "Q" about the 2018 midterm elections. Greene has also pushed the debunked Pizzagate conspiracy theory.

Shiva Ayyadurai (Massachusetts)

Shiva Ayyadurai was a Republican who ran as a write-in candidate for the U.S. Senate in Massachusetts. He had been defeated in the Republican primary on September 1, and had subsequently launched a write-in campaign. Ayyadurai has tweeted a misspelled version of the QAnon slogan – “Where we go one, we go all,” often abbreviated as “WWG1WGA” – and he has retweeted a tweet that contained the QAnon slogan.

Mike Cargile (California)

Mike Cargile was a Republican candidate who ran in California's 35th Congressional District. Cargile was one of the only two candidates who ran in the nonpartisan blanket primary on March 3, which meant that under California election law, he appeared on the ballot in November's general election. Cargile's Twitter profile includes the QAnon slogan and "#OathKeeper," likely a reference to a far-right armed militia group. He has also tweeted and retweeted the QAnon slogan, and responded "absolutely" to a user's tweet that "now's the time to get On Board" with "#QAnon." Cargile has since released a statement claiming he has the QAnon slogan in his profile because "it is the perfect sentiment for all Americans to have toward one another" and said that "we'll see" regarding "actual 'Q' intel."

Erin Cruz (California)

Erin Cruz was a Republican candidate who ran in California's 36th Congressional District. Cruz had come in second in the nonpartisan blanket primary on March 3, which meant under California election law, she appeared on the ballot in November's general election. According to NBC News, Cruz believes some of the "Q" posts are "valid information," saying, "I think that the biggest thing with QAnon is there's information coming out. And sometimes it is in line with what's going on in government." She also told NBC that she believes "there is someone out there putting information on the internet" as part of QAnon, adding that "a conspiracy theory only sounds crazy until it's proven."

Jo Rae Perkins (Oregon)

Jo Rae Perkins was a Republican candidate who ran for the U.S. Senate in Oregon (she was previously running in Oregon's 4th Congressional District before switching races) and a former chair of the Linn County Republican Party. She had won the Republican primary on May 19. She has repeatedly tweeted in support of QAnon and posted the QAnon slogan on Twitter and both her personal and campaign Facebook pages. Perkins has also said she follows the "Q team." Her activity has included pushing a "#QProof" (supposed evidence that "Q" posts are accurate), posting links on Facebook to multiple QAnon YouTube videos, and linking to a site that collects "Q" posts. She has also demanded that reporters ask Trump "the #Q," referring to a belief among the conspiracy theory's supporters that Trump would confirm "Q" as real if asked. Additionally, Perkins has posted a video of herself taking an oath supporting QAnon.

In a January 3 interview with Right Wing Watch's Jared Holt (formerly of Media Matters) that she livestreamed and which featured a "WWG1WGA" sticker in the background, Perkins expanded upon her belief in QAnon, saying there is a "very strong probability/possibility that Q is a real group of people, military intelligence, working with President Trump" and compared the "Q" posts to secret codes used during World War II. Later in the interview, she claimed that "Q is most likely military intelligence ... and they've been out there watching what's been going on with our country for decades and they are partnered with President Trump to stop the corruption and to save our

Perkins also said her QAnon support is part of her campaign strategy and claimed that "there's a lot more people that are running for political office that follow Q than are admitting to it."

Rob Chase (Washington, dropped out of race)

Rob Chase was a Republican candidate who ran in Washington's 5th Congressional District. He dropped out before the primary, according to Ballotpedia. According to The Pacific Northwest Inlander, Chase on Facebook has "repeatedly directed followers to check out QAnon posts or podcasts, writing in January that 'Q is posting again. This will be a week to remember,' and in April that 'Q is all hopped up tonight.' The outlet also reported that Chase has posted the QAnon slogan and wrote a blog post that described QAnon as part of a "battle that's been going on at least a few hundred years' with 'patriots' like Trump trying to thwart 'an ongoing plan by the Deep State to destroy America, because that is the only way they can establish a Global New World Order.' Chase also told the outlet that he was "intrigued" by QAnon and "open to it," though "he doesn't consider himself an outright QAnon supporter" despite his previous comments.

What I can promise and bring that our current Congressman cannot.

I wholeheartedly agree with President Trump's America First policy. We need a strong modern military dedicated to identifying future threats and being prepared to deal with them. Cyber threats, Industrial Espionage, and Biological warfare are as great of a threat as terrorism have been in the last two decades.

National Defense starts with a strong economy. Damage to our economy also damages our National Defense. As the Corona Virus Pandemic has shown us, dependence on the international industry is a threat to our National Defense. I want to incentivize manufacturing in the United States. I want products currently pouring in from China to be built in Louisiana. We can bring better-paying jobs to our State while helping end our dangerous dependence on the international industry.

While the threat of radical Islam continues to plague the world, I see China as a more significant threat to global stability. It doesn't matter how we see China; more critical is how they see us. They already treat us as an adversary to be used, manipulated, and cheated. Politicians and companies that allow the Chinese Communist Party to influence their behavior need to be held accountable for their weakness and greed.

Matthew Lusk (Florida, dropped out of race)

Matthew Lusk was a Republican candidate who ran in Florida's 5th Congressional District and has since dropped out of the race, according to Ballotpedia. Lusk has tweeted multiple QAnon videos and had an "issue" page on his campaign site specifically called "Q" featuring the text "who is Q." Lusk also appeared in a video on NBC News about his support for QAnon, which he demonstrated partly by including a "Q" on the back of his campaign signs.

Lusk has expanded upon his belief in QAnon in multiple interviews. He told the Florida Politics blog, "Q is one of my issues because it's definitely a leak from high places." In an interview with The Daily Beast, Lusk said that posts from "Q" are a "legitimate something" and that they are a "very articulate screening of past events, a very articulate screening of present conditions, and a somewhat prophetic divination of where the political and geopolitical ball will be bouncing next." And in an interview with NBC News, Lusk said "Q" is "like an advanced news warning," adding that "it might come out in the mainstream media a week or two weeks later. ## Jessi Melton (Florida, lost primary)

Jessi Melton was a Republican candidate who ran in Florida's 22nd Congressional District. She was defeated in the primary on August 18. On February 13, Melton made an appearance on the YouTube channel of InTheMatrixxx, a major QAnon account whose channel is devoted to the conspiracy theory. Melton promoted her appearance on her Twitter account by mentioning the "Q movement." During her appearance, one of the hosts asked if "you know about QAnon yet," to which Melton responded, "Yeah, a little bit about you guys. I mean, I know you're kind of just similar to me. I mean, you call it like you see it. And a lot of that are supposed to be things we don't speak of." The hosts then discussed a "Q" post with her regarding Attorney General William Barr. Melton also lauded the channel as a "pro-republic show" that is getting "awareness out there," and discussed having the hosts appear at one of her fundraisers. In June, Melton had one of the hosts at an event of hers and quote-tweeted his post showing a photo of them together, writing, "Thanks for coming my

James Mitchell (Washington, lost primary)

James Mitchell was a Democratic candidate who ran in Washington's 8th Congressional District. He was defeated in the nonpartisan blanket primary on August 4. Mitchell, who in March posted that he was going to "look further" into QAnon, has tweeted the QAnon hashtag and has repeatedly posted the QAnon slogan on Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram. He has also promoted a false conspiracy theory pushed by QAnon supporters that children in New York City were being rescued via tunnels and saved from sex trafficking. He has also repeatedly pushed the Pizzagate conspiracy theory and posted on YouTube a video airing anti-vaccine claims from a discredited conspiracy theorist.

The screenshot shows a Twitter thread from James Mitchell (@James_Mitchell). The first tweet is a reply to a user (@AliceQ45) with the text "AIDS #WWIWGA #IB PATRIOTS". Below this is a series of tweets from the account "Alice and Wonderland" (@AliceandWonderland) containing QAnon hashtags and messages. One message reads "Rescuing the children held underground in NYC! #Repost @zaida_mariela_adopted_patriot ..... The truth will come out. The guilty ones will pay for their crimes. The sun ... youtube.com". Another message from the same account reads "Q mentioned these! 📢 #WakeUpAmerica". To the right of these tweets is a larger tweet from James Mitchell (@James_Mitchell) with the text "Where We Go One We Go All Marker". This tweet includes a list of QAnon terms: "WWIWGA", "Drops will go fast.", "W/ clean SIG", "Marker", "Everything is planned.", "Years", "Message", "UNITY", "AWAKENING", "We Fight", "Concord", and "STAY TOGETHER". ## Samuel Williams (Texas, lost primary)

Samuel Williams was a Republican candidate who also ran in Texas' 16th Congressional District. Williams came in first in the primary on March 3 with a plurality, but then was defeated in the primary runoff on July 14. Williams has tweeted the QAnon hashtag and repeatedly tweeted the QAnon slogan. He has also run a Facebook ad promoting an appearance in January on Patriots' Soapbox, where he appealed for financial support for his campaign. Despite all of that, Williams has since denied to Texas Monthly that he supports the conspiracy theory, claiming he thought it "was just a bunch of crap" that "doesn't make a whole lot of sense," and said that he used QAnon hashtags "to gain followers" on social media.

Joanne Wright (California, lost primary)

Joanne Wright was a Republican candidate who ran in California's 34th Congressional District; she was the only Republican running in the district. She was defeated in the nonpartisan blanket primary on March 3. On Wright's personal Twitter account, her background photo is a picture of Trump pulling up a curtain to show a "Q." She has also tweeted a QAnon video and repeatedly tweeted the QAnon slogan. Wright, who was endorsed by the California Republican Party, has also pushed conspiracy theories about the novel coronavirus COVID-19 and the late Democratic National Committee staffer Seth Rich.
